

In a dark hall with tall walls, a small, pale child lies on a wine-red carpet, with no hair and clean, marble-like skin. They seem unconscious, unaware of where they are.

Their eyes open slowly, and they look around: a long, silent corridor with paintings on both sides, lights fixed to the ceiling, giving off a warm yellow glow. The walls can be heard creaking, almost as if breathing, and the lights give off a faint buzzing sound.

Our pale friend gets on their feet and looks for anything that might help, even if it raises more questions. They look straight forward and see a door; they go to it, and once they go to the other side, the corridor opens to an even wider room, and as they walk, they see there's a window, almost immediately they walk, faster, towards the window, that could perhaps explain what this place is, or at least if they could get out through it.

They look at the window, and the sight shocks them. An almost apocalyptic scene can be found staring out of that very frame: a vast, dry land with no life to be seen. As they contemplate that view with dread, they begin to wonder.

"What is this place? How did I get here?" As they're lost in their thoughts, a big figure walks toward them and speaks.

"Oh, sorry... I left it at triple D haha..."

A moment of dead silence goes by, as our little friend looks at the creature that seemed to be some kind of worker, with grey worn out clothes and a hat that covered most of their eyes with a dark shadow, they seemed odd, with a olive green skin and a mouth that had a hundred teeth, holding a broom on one hand and keys his wrist, curiously, they smelled very nice, they didn't react much to the arrival of the Janitor however, but were mainly confused by what he meant, and the fellow promptly continued.

"Here, let me turn it off for ya"

The Janitor pulled a string that was on the side of the window's frame. As he did, the image of the desert disappeared, and a black void could be seen on the outside.

"Don't think I've seen you before lil one, but out there there ain't nothing... nothing but nothing hahaha, so I wouldn't recommend yer be going outside"

"Say, what's the name yer got ay?"

And unable to speak, they mimic with their hands the letters that form their name:

AB

“Fine name that be, I ain’t going to forget it hahaha... I hope”

AB smiles at the odd individual they met. The Janitor pulls the string again, and now a beach is visible outside.

“Welp, gotta go do me duties”

The Janitor begins to walk towards one of the doors on the other side of the room, and the wood creaks with each of his steps. As he enters the room, AB watches them vanish into the room. They look back at AB.

“Be sure to not get lost, and if you are, look for the exit of the room; every room has one, so don’t get all bummed about it if ye don’t know where ya be. Toodles”

AB smiles with a bittersweet feeling, almost comforted by the monster creature thing, alligator Janitor. So on they go, towards the end of the room, taking the right, a long, intimidating, red hall leading to one oddly normal-looking dark Ebony door. As the doorknob is turned and the door is opened, a strong, short-lived wind pushes it fully open, and as they enter the next room, the door slams shut.

AB, startled, looks at the place and sees yet another hall, full of doors on both sides. Turns to the left, leading to more corridors with more doors, and to the right, the very same. As they walk through the room, they get close to the doors, and as they do, a very gentle wind can be heard from the other side, so out of curiosity, they decide to open the door. They see a vast, green pasture, and as they begin to enter the place, the door frame has a little bevel in which AB tripped and fell into the grass. Quickly, they get up and look to see where the door was, but to the dismay of our little pale friend, the door was about 3 meters above their heads, floating in the air.

With no means to reach the door through which they came, they move on and walk in the endless fields, doing so for hours, wondering what this place could be, the grass was tall, reaching their hips, and a gentle and brief wind made the place seem like it had some life, but still odd, the wind itself felt lifeless, the place wasn’t warm, nor cold, the sky was ever so strange, having this almost sickly saturated blue, they keep on their way however, eventually passing a single tree along the way, and sitting at times to rest. However, they walked for many miles, and moments came when AB felt a silent dread creeping from behind, the thought that perhaps they were stuck, without a way out, though these thoughts didn’t last long, and when they came, the words of the Janitor echoed in their mind:

“Look for the exit; every room has one”, reassuring them that it was a matter of patience, and as they kept walking, for many miles more, on the horizon they could finally see something new.

A black rectangle in the distance, surrounded by enormous clouds on both sides, “perhaps a door, or an entrance,” they thought, and with an immense feeling of relief, they kept walking, calmly towards this mysterious portal-looking door. Getting closer they were, but something wasn’t right; the room itself seemed to begin distorting, almost as if telling them to go the other way around. And the closer AB got to the door, the more things began to distort.

As they were right in front of the tall, dark, void-like door, the colors began to shift around its corners, and the room seemed to break around the frame of this mysterious entrance. With little to no hesitation- quite the opposite, curiosity-driven, AB walks through the darkness that was in front of them, and for a brief moment they seemed to float in nothing; they couldn't feel, hear, or smell- but that, however, did not last, and in a blink of an eye, they fell to the ground.

As they get up, to see where this drop led them to, AB is left in awe, standing in a large pillar of marble in a room that seemed to be an open universe, having galaxies and enormous creatures coming through what looked like openings from other dimensions, as AB is there absolutely shocked and incredibly filled with wonder, they see that there are more pillars, and small platforms floating in between each pillar. They begin to descend onto the platforms and go from one pillar to the next, being ever so careful, looking only at the platforms and the next pillar, avoiding at all costs looking down. In the last platform, though they slipped, got up safely, but ended up looking at what was beneath them, and there was a dark mass, with tendrils, and eyes that pierced their very soul. AB hears “ Careful now, you shouldn't stare for too long, or he'll grow curious ”

And as fast as they could, they got up straight and jumped into the last pillar. There stood a well dressed gentleman, who seemed to conduct several books in front of him, turning a page of each when done reading, in this pillar several closed books were floating, and as the man finished reading one of the books he had open in front of him, he sent it with the other closed books, turned around, and, revealed a big, furry, cat face.

“ Hello, it is very nice to make your acquaintance. I am Ka-el, the resident of this room, your host, you could say, though the real host is the Keeper; I'm just a simpleton haha. ”

“ At the moment I am studying. If you'd like to read something, I'm sure you'll find something of interest. Once I'm done, we can chat a bit; I'm sure you have questions ”

Thus, the cat turned back to his books, AB began looking at some books that got their attention, and read for about an hour, though, every few minutes they couldn't stop themselves from staring at the place they found themselves in, gazing at the stars, the galaxies that seemed to be in a jump's reach, the colossal beings passing by, and they, alongside the cat, were in the center of it all, truly a sight they didn't think they'd ever see.

As AB was lost in the infinity of that room, Ka-el called them over.

“ So, I’m surprised you got out of the pris- um, the pastures. Blaberian usually stays there for hours, either alone or playing with his odd friend, I forget his name ”

As they speak, AB admires Ka-el’s lush fur, going through his very elegant suit, and getting lost in his deep, vivid green eyes, ever so slightly drooling.

“I see you’re not much of a talker”

Just like that, they snap back to the conversation.

“ I’ve never seen you before... well, to be frank, I’m not one to exit my room very often... or, at all, so I don’t meet many of the other residents”

AB looks curious, as if wanting to ask about the comment.

“Oh, yes, there are others... I think. Mazuke tells me every resident has their own room”

And AB looks at them, in understanding.

“ He did say no one ever made anything similar to the pastures, and was quite impressed, hah, I found it amusing, that such a interesting fellow ran the mansion, or at least that’s what I’ve gathered, he was pretty much the only other intelligent being I’ve been able to speak to, since Blaberian isn’t much of an intellectual, that mutt ”

AB laughs softly

“I imagine you don’t want to stay here for long. If you’re a resident, you’ll want to go back to your room. I’ll send you back. How’s that?”

AB thinks and nods.

“Very well then, I won’t make you go through the hills. Don’t worry; do, however, come again, even though you don't speak much; having another intelligible person to speak to is always nice"

AB nods happily.

In the blink of an eye, the space and time shift wildly, taking AB to the very door they opened to the hills. They're left there, standing; they smile as they see Ka-el waving goodbye from a distance, so they close the door slowly. They breathe, catching their breath after such a series of weird encounters; however, as they finally can clear their mind:

" ThERe yOu Are! "

Is said from behind, AB feels a cold in their spine, so they turn around and see yet another unique individual; A large, round red robe, with golden details on the collar, and standing there, staring at AB with bright and rainbow like shifting calendoscope eyes, was a smiling skeleton, with crooked teeth, and a scary demeanor, alongside him was a small yellow chick with a red bandana, looking down angrily at AB.

" I sEnsed thEre waS a nEw rEsiDEnt, couldn't fiND ya thOUgh, but thEre ya wEre, hehe "

" cOme nOW , COme! "

The man took AB by the wrist, and anxiously they followed, almost running to keep up with his speed. They took a sharp turn into a long hall, and there they stopped at a wall.

" NOw, if it hUrtS, just try to squEAze yersELf, K? "

AB looked worried, and almost scared, as the gent walked into the wall, and the walls began to open, ever so slightly, so they passed through what seemed a slim crack in the wall that expanded just enough that they could breathe and walk to wherever they were taking AB to. After just a bit of running, they were puked out by the suffocating crack and entered a tiny but less claustrophobic corridor. In front of them was a small door, just big enough that they could squeeze themselves in.

" PUsh me a bit, will Ya? I'll gRAb ya to thE insIDe "

Just as quickly as they got taken, AB finds themselves with this monster-like being, sitting on a tiny sofa, and AB sits on the ground, on a soft carpet that seems to be full of food crumbs and drink spots. The room isn't very big, but filled with many things, big and small, many trinkets and paintings, tools and books, pots and boxes, a wardrobe flooding with jewelry, clothes,